Quin, William Spillane, Robert Gibson, P S Connolly, solicitor, and the Mayor. We dont think a better selection could be made. The gentlemen named command the confidence of the people of Limerick. They are practical business men, and the deputation is not too large to be unwieldy, nor too small to be insignificant. We trust these gentlemen will each make themselves fully acquainted with a particular argument and urge it home with all available force. Each can look at the subject from a different point of view, and state the arguments that can be urged from that point of vantage. A further meeting of the traders is summoned for Tuesday next to consider the resolutions, and to approve of the names submitted. The deputation will, therefore, have the weight of the whole body of the citizens of Limerick, and their representations and suggestions cannot be lightly passed over.
