Notice to Ladies.—I am still selling at greatly on the question whether the case 1 murder or a case of manslaughter, a reason I venture to make some obse you upon it. I shall mention the fa appear upon the informations, so far necessary, to enable you to follow wh observe to you in the matter of law soner is charged with having taken t man in the same employment as himse them boatmen—on the night of the 29 ber, 1891. There is some evidence depositions that there had been some before the boat on which they were le The crime was committed, at the journey, at Killaloe, and it appears ably both men concerned—both the lost his life and the man now charged been the cause of it-as well as seven also on the boat had been indulgin Ultimately, some occurrence took resulted in the man who lost his li-severe wounds on the head, of which following day. Now, if you are satisfi evidence that there was provocation or that there was such het blood in reduced the murder below the crim murder, it would be your privilegest for manalegater and not find a bill but as I have already told you, the upon the person charged, in the first i obligation of reducing the offence. ask you to look carefully into the form your own judgment as to whele jury would be justified, upon the f before you, in finding a verdict of wi if no further evidence were given. a petty jury would be so justified on t before you, it would be your duty to f the actual offence, but if you come to sion that a perty jury would not be finding that any higher crime than in had been committed, you will find a slaughter and ignore the bill for mu make this passing observation, that i cases, which would appear to be cases the trial has been removed to anothe I presume these cases will be investigued by the city of Cork, they have been sent. As aware, the judges are furnish constabulary with a statement of the order as regards crime, both madelected, and I am sorry to a return for the county of Clare before no encouraging feature whatever: of cases specially reported since makes a total of 124. This time two 100. Of minor offences not specially every single instance there is an increase in common assaults and l cases of intoxication and vagran increases are small in number, a unimportant in character, but it is in the specially reported cases which make the observation I ha made, that there is nothing ing in the return. I cases of murder—one of them, the case to which I have already therefore more prebably would be should not appear in that return seven cases of firing at the person arson, and 13 cases of killing and mason of which are marked by circu great brutality. There are seven o malicious injury, and four cases of as to one of which I am glad to o return that it has been prosecut and condign punishment of five servitude inflicted on those found There are four cases of assaulting dw and eight cases of intimidation—I
