

of the town it was proposed to erect. There were a few cottages in Old but they were small thatched cottages about a hundred years old. The had been a farm labourer, but recently, unable to get agricultural work, he took to as a scavenger.

Mr Kenny witness said the site was which had been rejected under a me.

Local Government Board Inspector, Clerk of the Union, were examined stated that there was agricultural vicinity of the cottage, and that there was no necessity for such a cottage in the locality. He said he appeared for the petitioner's scheme, and opposed it on the ground that no necessity existed for the proposed cottage the site now selected was, on the occasion, rejected by Major Routledge Government Board Inspector. The Inspector, he contended, was not fit for cultivation, and the applicant was an agricultural labourer.

He was examined, and gave evidence in support of the statement made by counsel. The Chancellor intimated that the decision of the council would be given later on.

Mr Mahan said the next application was for the erection of a labourer's cottage in the town of Overhill, in the electoral division of the same union. It was proposed that a new cottage was to be substituted for the one which was certified to be unfit for habitation, that one would be removed as soon as a new one was built. The petitioner Louis Foley, portion of whose land it was proposed to take for the purpose.

He was given for the guardians that the best was the most suitable that could be had in the locality.

Mr Mond Barry (instructed by Mr P. S. Barry solicitor), appeared for the petitioner, and stated to the erection of the cottage on the grounds that the man John Mahan for whom the cottage was intended, was 17 years of age, and for several years had worked for any farmers; that there were no farmers in the district who held a greater amount of land than he did, including the sitting of Mr D Corry, who held over fifty acres, and whose lands there was no cottage. Counsel stated that there was a union cottage at Foley's farm of 32 acres. The proposal for another cottage was vexatious, and was not warranted by the conditions of the neighbourhood.

Mr Mahan said the next application was for the erection of a labourer named O'Brien, on the farm of Mrs O'Donoghue, at Ballygreen, in the Over-Fergus Electoral Division. The proposal was intended to replace an existing labourer's cottage which had fallen out of repair and had been condemned by Dr Frost and Mr. Sanitary officer. The applicant opposed to Lord Inchiquin on the ground that the late Francis O'Donoghue, the tenant of the farm on which the cottage was to be built, got a fair rent fixed, and a fair rent order directed the tenant to
