

body like the House of Lords could not set itself up as a barrier against it. If the English people, however, willed Home Rule they must go further and will the method of carrying the policy out, and as the carrying out of the policy would be met by passive, if not active, resistance in Ulster, then the employment of physical force would be necessary, and that the majority of the electorate were very far from supporting. Looking back upon the past eight years, the Unionists would see they have advantages now they did not possess at first. The alliance between the Conservatives and Liberal Unionists has been cemented in a way that had not been expected then, and is firmer and closer now than ever it had been. The Unionists were now rid of "false friends and weak-kneed supporters," and it was better to see such men as Sir George Trevelyan in their true colours as Opportunist Home Rulers than in the guise of Unionists waiting to desert their friends at the most critical moment. Speaking last night, the Duke of Devonshire, referring to previous visits, remarked that few members of the English Home Rule party are much in the habit of visiting any part of Ireland. There were a few exceptions, however. Mr Shaw Lefevre came over for the purpose of assisting at "scenes of evictions, carefully prepared and dramatically arranged," and on these occasions he made promises to the evicted tenants which he may have some difficulty in redeeming. Mr John Morley, also, qualified himself for the duty of administering the law in Ireland, "as the spectator at least, at an Irish row in the courthouse in Tipperary, but there is a doubt whether if Mr Morley was to visit Tipperary now, under the escort of his friends, Mr Dillon and Mr O'Brien, he would receive in Tipperary a very enthusiastic reception." These gentlemen never visited Ulster, and yet Ulster plays a very important part in the present political game. The people of the Northern province look upon the maintenance of the supreme authority of Parliament as the one and only safeguard of their constitutional liberties and the groundwork of their material prosperity, and they are not prepared to accept any substitute for it. His Grace referred to the calmness of the present. He anticipated that on the rejection of the Bill by the Lords there would be a vehement crusade started both in Ireland and Great Britain against the Upper House. On the contrary, the whole country, both Great Britain and Ireland, was never less politically agitated than it is at the present time. The Unionists say it is because the Irish do not care about the Bill, but Mr Morley tells his English audience that the Irish have "a deep-seated and ineradicable feeling and desire to manage their own affairs." "How does Mr John Morley know?" asks his Grace, "how many singers come from, and who is to make her debut at this concert. We understand she will shortly appear on the operatic stage, and that her voice is of beautiful quality and highly cultivated." Mr Kendal Irwin will be the conductor.

THE MAYORALTY.

We are now within a short time of the day for the election of Mayor—1st December—and speculation is rife as to what the result of it will be should a contest be entered into. It is stated that the Federation party will put forward Mr Stephen Hastings, solicitor, T.C., in opposition to Mr Bryan O'Donnell (Parnellite) the outgoing Mayor.

DEATH OF MR S. O'FLANAGAN, T.C.

We very much regret to announce the death of Mr Stephen O'Flanagan, T.C., which took place unexpectedly last night at his residence John Square. The deceased was in his usual health up to a few days ago, when he was rather suddenly seized with an illness which developed with fatal consequences. Mr O'Flanagan was for many years a member of the Corporation, and evinced a deep interest in the Irishtown ward, which he represented. His unassuming and courteous manner gained for him many friends, and he was held in the highest esteem by all classes of the citizens, to whom, as a commercial man, he was well known. Deceased was a Parnellite in politics. His death at a comparatively early age will be deeply regretted. The funeral will take place to-morrow.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

It is arranged that meetings for the promotion of Christian Union and the deepening of spiritual life will be held in the Havergal Hall, Limerick, on Wednesday, 15th November. The meetings will be held in the afternoon at three o'clock, and in the evening at eight o'clock. Addresses will be delivered at both meetings by the Rev W E Burroughs, B.D., Incumbent of the Mariners' Church, Kingstown, and the Rev F Stuart Gardiner, A.M., Kingstown. From the well-known earnestness and ability of these gentlemen, interesting and profitable meetings may be expected. The Rev Dr Wilson will preside in the afternoon. The Rev Canon Gregg will preside in the evening, and clergymen of the various churches of the city will take part in the proceedings.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGE.

On last Wednesday Mr John William Robert Gregg, of Oatlands, Navan, son of the Lord Bishop of Cork, was married to Miss Mary Studdert, youngest daughter of Major Charles W Studdert, of Cragmoher, Co. Clars. The ceremony was performed by the father of the bridegroom, the Lord Bishop of Cork, and took place in St Mary's Church, Donnybrook. The church was filled by the friends of the happy couple, and was tastefully decorated for the occasion. The music, which was full choral, was rendered by the choir boys of St Patrick's Cathedral.

TO-DAY.

This is the title of a weekly magazine-journal practitioners who have not devoted themselves specially to chemistry and physics, and degrees or licenses therein from the I Chemistry; the Society of Public Analysts Great Britain and Ireland, or some similar. The position of an analytic chemist given at the present day to ordinary practitioners is not considered to employ trained men, that a provision exists in the Town Council, if they think fit, in the services of an analyst of any one city or borough. It is an absolute necessity in the public interest that the selection made solely on the qualifications and of the candidates. This is important, general grounds; for this reason, that so made will secure the approval of public outside the city and induce them to financial aid, which they will certainly and fiably refuse if any other motives pre choice.

THE MUNSTER FAIR IN THE

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LIMERICK CHRONICLE.
Dear Sir,—I am very glad to see that you are arguing so strenuously and so sensibly for the removal of the Munster Fair from the city to its own proper ground. Every reason why this change should take place at once, and none of any importance. No class of the citizens benefits by the custom, except perhaps one; and, if others would earnestly desire an alteration, I have good reason to lift against such a dangerous and disorderly of the streets as the Munster Fair always having been a very severe sufferer, through the overcrowding and recklessness of some of the exhibitors on one occasions. Nor can any one say what happen to the injury of life, limb, or if this state of matters is allowed to continue. If all the Mayors acted as Mayor Hall would soon be put to the evil practice results in all directions would be of beneficial character.

Yours truly,

ANTHONY
