It is stated by a New Ross correspondent that Laurence Archer, who was supposed to have committed suicide after attempting to murder his wife in December, at Coolhill, County Kilkenny, was found by the police a few morning ago to be secreted in a barn, which they surrounded, but he escaped through a window, ran through a wood, crossed the Barrow, concealed himself in a river barge, was conveyed next day to Waterford, and succeeded in escaping in a trading vessel from Waterford to England. He is said to have had £200 in his possession when leaving home.
