with and married a gipsy girl, but in his absence she escaped to the woods, and when discovered was sleeping under the skies, and feeding on hedgehogs, after the fashion of the race from whom she had been taken. The Abbé Liszt, charmed with the talent for music displayed by a gipsy boy, took him to Paris and tried to train the little lad. But all in vain. The moment he saw his own people in Vienna his delight was indescribable; there was no longer any hope of keeping him under the restraint of polite life.—From The Peoples of the World, by Dr Robert Brown, for December.

It was Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoj who first made the Parsee name famous in Europe for philanthropy more than a generation ago. His younger contemporary, Sir Cowasjee Jehanghir, carried on the tradition, but both have been eclipsed by the present head of the Parsee community at Bombay, Sir Dinshaw Manookjee Petit. The total of that gentleman's benefactions reach an enormous sum, probably not much less than half a million sterling, and the Bombay papers, just received, inform us that he recently gave a fresh proof of his philanthropy on the occasion of three of his grandchildren being invested with the sacred thread—a ceremony which corresponds to our baptism or confirmation.
