ZOLA AND ENGLISH CRITICS.

Zola was entertained at dinner at the Hotel de Ville, London, on Thursday night, by the members of the Authors' Club, Mr Oswald Crawshaw presiding. In response to the toast of the evening, M Zola said amid all this he was fully understood that the opinions of English critics with regard to his works remained unaltered, but they had seen the man who had found him not so black as legend had him. His art was different to theirs, and would wound them, but when they understood his effort and sincerity were embodied in his work they would not refrain from saluting him.
