

can be credited with that development which crick football tedly display? To this, says the Journal, one can certainly answer, in the American Journal of the, comparing the average football the cadets at the naval academy e student at the same place, finds e players were but two months others, they were 4 per cent eight, 28 per cent in weight, it in lung capacity, and a total strength. Between theudent and the average American the players were one year and one t they were 2.8 per cent taller, 20 ar, had 10 per cent more lung ere 40 per cent stronger than the grade of Yale students. Clearly selective influence by which the are drawn to take up the game n of the weaker sort.
