of Romeo and Juliet" in Verona has never beheld a stranger scene than that of the other day, when eight English tourists were locked up in it by the irate custodian because they would not pay the lira a head which he demanded for his services. We hope the party had their Shakespeare at their fingers' ends to beguile the weary time till the Syndic came to their release. "I will stay with thee, and never from this palace of dim night depart again. Here, here, will I remain with worms that are thy chambermaids," would have been appropriate at the beginning; but at a later stage the entombed ones might have become desperate, and tempted, like Juliet, in their rage to "pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shroud," and "with some great kinsman's bone as with a club" dash out their desperate brains. The experience was cheaply bought for the extra tenpence apiece which the party had ultimately to pay.
