Civil Engineer of Nenagh, has acted for many years as engineer to this Board, during which he has been engaged designing and superintending to completion important works involving large expenditure. In the execution of his duties he always displayed professional skill, zeal, and devotion to the interests of the Board. He has always carried out the orders of the Board with despatch. We wish further to testify that Mr Gill, within the last two years formulated, designed, and carried through to completion an important scheme of water supply for the town of Nenagh, on the gravitation system, which, acting on the report of an eminent hydraulic engineer called in to inspect and report on the works, we believe to be the most perfect of any of its kind in Ireland."

THE RATES.

The Clerk reported that the collectors' accounts were examined on Tuesday, when it appeared that Mr O'Brien had lodged £260, leaving £317 of the rate outstanding in his district, including £339 seed rate. Mr Butler lodged £60, leaving £204 outstanding, of which £86 was for seed rate. Mr McKeogh lodged £104, his arrears being £340, including £129 for seed. The collectors handed in their arrear sheets, which the guardians now carefully scrutinised, and expressed the opinion that some at least of the outstanding amount ought to be available.

THE CORK STREET PREACHERS.

(FROM THE STANDARD OF TO-DAY).
The Irish Unionists intend to draw further attention in the House to the molestation of Protestant street preachers in the streets of Cork. It is contended that the Chief Secretary must either protect these people, or in case their action constitutes an obstruction proceed against them by ordinary legal methods.
