THE ELECTION ROWS.

With the exception of some slight brawls, which occurred in Cornwallis street, Nelson street, and Mary street, the town last night presented its normal condition. Stone throwing was indulged in amongst women and youngsters in Mary street, but little or no damage was done to either person or property, and the police were most vigilant in suppressing the disorder. During the evening some disturbance which, however, was of a rather harmless kind, was carried on in Cornwallis street between opposing mobs, and a man named Collopy was struck with a stone. His injuries, which were trifling, were dressed at Barrington's Hospital. In Nelson street similar conduct took place, but was soon suppressed by the police, who were on duty for the greater part of the night and until all was perfectly quiet. There are a number of extra police still in town. It is hardly likely that anything further will occur to disturb the peace of the city, which has been so well maintained by the authorities during a very trying contest.

John O'Brien, aged 19 years, was admitted into Barrington's Hospital on Thursday afternoon suffering from a broken ankle. It appears from the statement of the injured man that he is a Parnellite, and when passing down John street he was followed by a number of persons. While running away his ankle turned under him, causing the injury.

At the Police Court to-day, Francis O'Shaughnessy, a young lad, was charged by Head-Constable Feeney with being a ringleader in a mob of other boys who threw stones at the Federation room windows in Henry street, on Wednesday night. He was remanded to Petty Sessions.

This afternoon, Mr Quilty, who up to recently was a prominent member of the Parnellite section, but who during the late election in Limerick took an active part in the interests of the Federationist candidate, Mr O'Keeffe, was assaulted while passing through Sexton-street. The complainant alleges that he was struck with a stone on the head, but the injury received is not dangerous. The occurrence has been reported to the police, but as Mr Quilty is unable to identify his assailant, no arrests have been made.

THE LIMERICK ELECTION.

Referring to the result of the contest for Limerick City, the Advertiser says it is to hand the seat over from one of the Irish factions to the other, and to reduce Mr Redmond's little band of followers from 12 to 11. But it is clear from the figures that the people of Limerick cared far less about the election than did the politicians. The total electorate of that city is over five thousand; and the total of those who polled is between three and four thousand. The same phenomenon was manifest in South Kerry the other day. The Irish peasants and townsmen appear to be fairly indifferent to the rivalries of the Parnellites on the one hand and the two sections of the Nationalists on the other. One is not surprised at it. Irish politics have become so complex since the recent developments in the Nationalist camp that it is hard for the plain man to discern the difference between the various parties as it was
