HOUSEKEEPERS.—All good house-be anxious to secure the best possible be least possible cost, and, for the heir bread, pastry, cakes, &c., they tter advised than to use Borwick's ler. The manufacture of this whole-was commenced shortly after the the Queen, and for more than fifty s taken the lead—a proof of its turbing effect on the equanimity of a turkeycock, while the sight of a yellow book—even though it may contain a poem by Mr Norman Gale—induces acute exasperation in thrushes and blackbirds. Blue, again, is the colour exorated of sparrows and linnets, while the wakeful weasel and the sagacious stoat are at one in their dislike of striped or multi-coloured vestments. Perhaps the most remarkable to all these instances of susceptibility to colour in animals is that of the horse, which is said to be injuriously affected by the sight of pink paper at most times. The idea of a horse shying at the sight of the Sporting Times is paradoxical in the extreme, but horses are notoriously sensitive to ocular impressions, unlike dogs, who can gaze even on a matinee hat without turning a hair.
