

annals of the borough, took place of stands, holding many thousands, and on the pavements and in the very hat was lifted, and throughout the Borough the spectators joined chorus of God Save the Queen, these demonstrations appearing to give her utmost gratification. The enthralled as the procession passed St. Paul's, passed by the Roman Catholic Church, then entered Westminster Bridge, which thoroughfare the Thames was crossed by Westminster Bridge. The procession arrived at Westminster at 1.30 p.m. and her majestic cortege were greeted by tumultuous cheers of loyalty and affection had escorted her without intermission to the starting point. The same procession moved along Whitehall, until her the whole of her stately following followed through the horseguards. The procession from Westminster to St. James's Park was an at least notable points, a triumph which none who saw it were likely to order to witness it many thousands offered, a good deal from the heat after midday when the sun shone brightly, but this and other personal details disregarded, and general good-will prevailed for the sake of participating in a remarkable and historic occasion.

AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.
 The Queen arrived at Buckingham Palace on her way exactly at a quarter to two, the time at which, according to the official programme, she was to have reached the Royal Palace. As far as can be ascertained the agglomeration of such vast crowds was unattended by any accident. An officer in the detachment of the Guards riding in the rear of the procession was thrown from his horse in the Circus and was carried into the Eye Hospital at the corner of Waterloo road. Inquiry at St. James's and Guy's Hospitals elicited information that two slight casualties had been treated, while at Guy's Hospital five people had been detained for a short time as practicable of her Majesty's progress on the outward route, the streets in the rear were withered and marched back again by way of Grosvenor and Buckingham Palace Road en route to their respective headquarters. Regarding the procession as one, and reckoning from the time of the Colonial contingents passed the Palace at 10 o'clock, the time occupied was about four hours. On the return journey the rear of the troops taking part passed up Grosvenor Hill, but the Headquarters Staff remained on the side of Buckingham Palace and awaited the arrival. Then followed the equestrian Princes, who drew up on either side of the way and formed with the Staff a magnificent such brilliant colouring and representation as has seldom, if ever before,

The Chairman inquired what was the estimated cost of the works?
 The Clerk—£1,007.

THE DAY OF MEETING.

The Clerk read a letter from Mr Colbert, J P, guardian, Newcastle West, pointing out that Monday was an inconvenient day for members to attend at Glin.

Mr Lane (jocosely)—Is that the gentleman that came down here to do the business gratis. That is a neat bit of business—dictation (laughter.)

The Clerk—Mr O'Keefe has given notice of motion to have the day changed to Tuesday. What shall you do with this letter?

Mr Lane—Put it in the waste paper basket (laughter).
 The letter was marked "read."

APPOINTMENT OF MASTER.

On the motion of Mr Lane, seconded by Mr O'Keefe, the Rev Brother Liddy was appointed master of the school, to replace the Rev Brother O'Shea, at the former salary, £90 a year.

A notice of motion stood in the name of Mr McInerney, to have an additional brother teacher appointed at a salary of £50 a year.

Mr Lane asked if an additional teacher was required.
 The Master—We would want two if we got them.

Mr Lane—I will propose that you get one.
 Mr O'Keefe—Does all this £50 come out of the rate?

The Clerk—No; we get a grant of £30.
 Mr O'Keefe—I have great pleasure in that case in seconding Mr Lane's proposition.

The board unanimously agreed to the resolution. An application from the carpenter for an increase of wages was unanimously refused.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

There is really nothing doing in the Stock Exchange, the Market having practically given itself over to public celebrations this morning, the ceremony having been a great success. American market wears a healthy aspect, and a further general advance looked for after the holidays; Milwaukee considered especially promising, although prices rather high on steady progress of Tariff legislation on the other side is causing considerable satisfaction here while the market is evidently getting beyond the control of Wall street professionals.
