APRIL, 1748.

our issue of Tuesday, 1st June.)

I found a roaring lion began to roar also. Some Roman Catholics and good Protestant families were either to oppose the work of the Society or to do it openly, the strong against them.

A great part of the town was in a ferment, I found. The impression is not made on one here and there only. The hearers seem to go on held in the Connaught side of the town, an attentive multitude of both men and women Catholics. I preached with no help in Gilead, but with the help of the particular. I am satisfied that I am most persuaded to give them the word of the Physician of Souls.

to Birr, twenty miles from the city of the Session house not far from the Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, to a dull, rude, senseless, and uneducated the greater part of the way just in the middle of a long street, a man cried out (a Carmelite priest), "You lie!" "You lie!" others cried out, "Knock him down!" "No sooner said than done. I knew not what was the result of the evening.

There being no house that would accommodate the congregation, I preached here in a new place, in the morning, but there was a heavy shower, and such a blessing as since I landed in Ireland.

I rode to Clara, and preached there, who were not afraid of a heavy shower at half an hour after sermon, and then rode to Tullamore on the common Irish cabin which still reigned here.

Indeed, for no light can come from a w-built cavern on the master at one hole, which is both an eye and door. In the evening I preached in a quiet congregation, though small.

Though my flux continuedly increased by my eating a bad dinner, as unwilling to break my shift to ride in the afternoon I had not seen such a congregation out from Dublin, and the stand like sticks and stones understand what I spoke, of the spirit and in truth."

The people came at 5 than I had in any part of Ireland, and moved towards them the the quarter deck. I was soon wet from head to foot, but I took no cold at all. Four in the morning we landed at Holyhead, and in the evening reached Carnarvon.

LATEST DETAILS.

Reuter's Agency learns that the opinion prevailing in high diplomatic circles in London is that the assassination of the King and Queen of Serbia (as fully reported in Thursday Chronicle) will not be followed by civil war in that country. Since his marriage, King Alexander has become most unpopular, and the proclamation of Prince Peter Karageorgevitch, who is son-in-law of the Prince of Montenegro, is most probably the solution of the present situation, as his election would be most acceptable to the people.

It is known that every Power in Europe is anxious for peace, and none desires war. Should unexpected complications arise, it is thought that Austrian troops would immediately march into Serbia and restore order, but the
