

multitudinous duties of a last profession, so one would appeal to the fair sex, yet of one successful woman out of Miss Carro Clark, head of M. Clark Publishing Company, said to be the only successful one in the world. This plucky one during 1903 in publishing all the more remarkable when Miss Clark built up her vast and without any influence. Years of her career as a publisher very hard from morning to night; she a large staff of assistants.

DOGS IN BOOTS.

cannot but view with regret the notion of placing dogs in "boots," in the World. The pampered ones have already to suffer much from their adoring but thoughtless owners. To feed them, deprive them of exercise, irritate their skins with strong ointments for long motor drives; clutter of ridiculous coats and titles creatures have not hitherto known of their mistress's love of show, however, has now introduced the dog in a boot, and in these unbecoming contrivances for keeping its feet warm the pet of the moment has to suffer. Puss in Boots is, of course, a noble figure in the historical story, but a dog in boots is

STAND WOMEN'S CLOTHES?

The Illustrated declares that they are sarcastic over the male descriptions to describe them. But she is allowed to talk to a man who took on a woman's clothes, and only a fool would, and began to humiliate himself in the way with men who wish to look, in their ignorance, that that, but soberly, critically, with yet discriminating taste. We never, and were so wrapped up in either of us spoke to our other clothes were handed round. Then drawn by the lady on his left, the right said: "He wears it well, does what well?" I asked, "His he replied. "He was a shop-keeper, and married old Lady his noble carriage." Well, I wonder what he was talking about, but he thoroughly deserved his
