small pieces, and an... clear solution is obtained. It is then put aside to cool, and a precipitate settles. For a few days the solution may be cloudy, but eventually it becomes quite bright. It will be seen that this is a water varnish, and thus the films can be varnished wet or dry. They may require five minutes' immersion in the varnish to secure complete absorption of the varnish into the entire body of the gelatine layer. The films are then removed, drained, and hung up to dry. This does not take a very considerable time.

OTHER USES.

Such a varnish can be used to give prints, even matt bromide prints (enlargements, &c.) a semi-gloss; also to make them waterproof; and it can be used to "fix" crayon work, or "black-and-white finish" on bromide enlargements. In all these cases it would seem to be best to spray the varnish on to the surface with a spray or "atomiser." For unworked prints, mere immersion, or several successive brushings with a camel-hair brush (with intermediate drying), will be just as satisfactory.

THE DIFFICULTY.

Our correspondent's difficulties arise first from the colour of the shellac. He has bought the ordinary orange shellac. This yields a brown-stained looking varnish. This can be disregarded for films; and, unless the paper is of a very porous character, it can be disregarded for paper too. It is best to try the effect of the varnish on a piece of the paper first. The ordinary orange shellac dissolves the most easily and yields the best "body." If less colour is desired, bleached lac must be used. Here comes in difficulty number two. "Simplissimus" cannot succeed very well with it. First, let us say that only freshly prepared specimens of bleached lac are at all easily soluble. Old ones will be very refractory in dissolving, or may prove so. Secondly, there will always be less "body" with a bleached or white shellac varnish. Shaking must be continued at intervals for days, then decant and allow to settle, rise by immersing the print for at least five minutes. Dry, and if necessary give a second varnishing. Celluloid varnish will do even better, and yields no trace of stain. It can only be used on dry surfaces.

INJURED MAN'S DEPOSITIONS TAKEN.

Yesterday Ald. McDonnell J.P., took the depositions of Michael Holohan, at Barrington's Hospital who charged Michael Lyons with assault. Both the man are labourers, and reside at Prospect Hill. On Saturday they had a quarrel, and Holohan challenged Lyons to come out and fight. The challenge was declined, and on the result Lyons who it is stated, was seen standing at the door of the house, a tong in one hand and the cover of an oven in the other, repeated the challenge before weapons were resorted to. Holohan received a blow of the oven cover in the head, and some women having brought word to the police who had the injured man conveyed to Barrington's Hospital, where the wound was found to be a very serious one.

Ald. McDonnell remanded the accused.

DEATH OF MR. EDWARD HEIGNEY (LONDON).

(From our own Correspondent.)

The brief announcement by wire on Monday morning of the demise of Mr. Edward Heigney, which occurred at his late residence in London on Sunday, 27th inst., has occasioned feelings of regretful sympathy in Ballingarry district, and particularly among those who had the pleasure of his acquaintance and knew his good-hearted, kind disposition. The deceased gentleman had been connected by the closest ties with one of the oldest West Limerick families, having married in the land of her adoption Miss Catherine Keating, second daughter of the late Mr. John Keating, Ballingarry, where her brothers and nephew reside and enjoy widespread popularity.

Mr. Myles J. Jordan, Solicitor, Castlebar, died rather suddenly at the Bath Hotel, Westport Quay, last week. Deceased, who was second son of the late Mr. Myles Jordan, Crown Solicitor for Mayo, was in his forty sixth year.
