

so with regard to religion. Lady Helen writes in "The Queen": Nearly all the reformers or founders of religion had red hair; history mentions that Mohammed was a red-haired man. There is no tradition about the colour of Moses before he became grey; but it is said that he certainly had a finger in the evolution of Judaism, was "ruddy." Louis XIV. was a sandy-haired man, with many of the characteristic peculiarities of the red-haired race; and the greatest of all the Emperors was Nero. Coming to women, their ruddiness is said to run more to wickedness than to beauty. Cleopatra is called "the red-haired woman." Mary Queen of Scots had red hair, and her ill-fated descendent Prince Charlie resembled her in colouring. Lucrezia Borgia looks in her hair somewhat auburn. Queen Elizabeth I. had hair of decidedly red colouring, which will suit her admirers and her detractors. Red hair is said to be a sign of mixed race, and seldom, if ever, to occur where there is not a drop of Semitic blood. A generality of this sort is perfectly safe one to enunciate, as by this a everybody is of more or less mixed race, and all pedigrees must include a son of Shem somewhere.
