IRISH INSANITY.

HOW IT IS CAUSED.

Referring to this matter with which we dealt in our leading column on Tuesday, the "Evening Standard" says—The Celtic temperament, according to a report of the Irish inspectors in New York, is peculiarly liable to insanity under the most of strange conditions. The Irishman goes mad to make his fortune. He leaves behind him the good humour and peace of mind characteristic of the Irish peasantry. The struggle for life in a foreign land preys on his mind. He becomes insane, and like a hunted animal, strives to return home. If so fortunate, he swells the Irish lunacy returns. If not, he seeks refuge generally in an American asylum. It is a sad story, which somewhat discounts the usual theories occasionally drawn from us of Irish insanity and happiness in America. The causes of insanity, however, are far to seek, and in considering the Celtic temperament is to be traced up too wide a field of cogitation and argument. The inspectors' very material suggestion is probably more sensible than any racial theories. They say that the inauspicious dietary and other privations of the majority of the population of Ireland, when acting over many generations, have led to impaired strength of the nervous system. In other words, Ireland's food is suitable for the land and strife of America.

(FROM A FAR-OFF LAND).

A happy little home when the sun shone out, the busy little mother got the children all ready for school; Johnny fetched the water and Tommy brought the wood, Billy-boy tied both his shoes, as every laddie would—Daddy rocked the cradle with a clatter and a song, and the little sister grew so pretty and so rosy. The sweet peas and the morning glories climbing up the door, the tender vine of shadow with its length across the floor. The "pines" and the roses, and the quiver of a grass, the cheery call of friendship from the neighbours they pass. The soufflé and the shouting and the little sister's laugh, the rabbit starts up somewhere, and her "great lips" scamper off. A happy little home when the twilight fell, along the meadow rang the old cow bell, the tinkling that is music through the rushing of the years—see the little mother in the tremble of the dress, hear the happy laughter as she cries, "The boys have come," we know she's getting supper in the happy little one.
