AUTHORSHIP OF SHAKESREARE'S PLAYS

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LIMERICK CHRONIQUE

Sire—The Baconian theorists ignore the con-temporary Stratford names, Sly, Fluellen; the allusion to the "lucies" of the Charlecote Lucys. and Shakespeare's own escutcheon, "my golden coat" (Lucrece i., 205), combined with the mention of such place names as Wincot, Barton on the Heath, Coventry, Southam, Sutton Coldfield, Kenilworth, which tend to show that the writer was a native of our shire. Shakespeare szys, "In Warwickshire I have true-hearted friends (Henry VI., IV., VIII,) but it appears that after the lapse of centuries there are some anxious to snatch the bays from his immortal

Yours, etc.,

If our friend's logic is right, and the mention of Warwickshire names "tends to show that the writer was a native of that shire." what of the thousand and one other places mentioned in the plays? Neither Bacon or Shakespeare could be natives of any two of them, and as compared with Warwicks shire places, the other places mentioned are very much more numerous.—Ed. L.C.]

FUNERAL OF MRS. KELLY,

The death of this highly regarded lady is much regretted in Ardagh and the district, where her gentle and loving disposition endeared her to hosts of friends. She was mother of Mr. Patrick Kelly, B.L., a preminent member of the Munster Bar. She had reached a fine old age, and passed peacefully away consoled by ministrations of her Church, and in the presence of her affectionate children. The interment took place at Ardagh, the cortege being very large and representative.

The chief mourners were-Michael Kelly

(husband), Patrick Kelly, B.L. (son).

The clergymen present were—Rev. Father Hallinan, P.P., Ardagh; Rev. James Carroll, C.C.

ALLEGED SERIOUS ASSAULT.

At Castlemartyr Petty Sessions, a young man named William Waish, of Monabragher, was brough: up in custody, charged with having seriously assaulted a manenamed David Joyce, of Kyle, near Killeagh.

Sergeant B. Stone, of Killeagh, said that there was a piece of the man's eye out.

The Bench fixed the bail at £20 for the accused, and two sureties of £10 each, which would be accepted for his appearance at the next sitting of the Court, on a medical certificate being produced in the meantime showing that the man's life was not in danger.
