PILOT'S SAD DEATH.

Drowned in the Shannon.

An inquest has been held by Mr. Thomas Lillis, J.P., Coroner for West Clare, on the body of a pilot named McNamara, aged about 60, who was drowned off the pilot boat near Beale Bar last month, after putting another pilot on board a French ship bound for Limerick. The remains were washed up at Rhinella Bay.

Pilot Griffin gave evidence touching the occurrence. He and McNamara after putting a pilot on board the "Frenchman," were returning, when deceased accidentally went overboard.
The night was dark, and although "heaving to" and hanging around for some time, he could not see McNamara again.

A verdict of accidental drowning was returned.

THE FINISHING TOUCH.

No tea-table is quite complete without a good supply of that old-fashioned dainty—Currant Bread. Be sure to slice it very thin, as by this means the fruit is cut through and all the delicious flavour is drawn out. Such excellent Currant Bread is now being made by all enterprising bakers, and its cost is so little above that of the ordinary loaf, that it is not worth the housewife's while to make it at home.

A DOG'S INTELLIGENCE.

An unusual example of the presence of mind and intelligence displayed by dogs was seen in Colmore Row one wet morning this week. It was just at the hour when that thoroughfare was most crowded. A collie dog, accompanying a boy who was wheeling a hand truck along, got between the truck and a motor car, which was proceeding at a rapid pace in the opposite direction. There was absolutely no time for the dog to get out of the way of the motor car, and everybody thought he would have been crushed to death. But just at the critical moment the dog, as if taken with a sudden inspiration, leapt clean into the truck and escaped an almost certain and horrible death.
This seems to be the summit of intelligence.
In such circumstances an average human being would have lost his head.
