Mr. John Redmond said it was evident from the statement which had been made by the Chief Secretary that whether the Bill passed into law or not the Government would fail to carry out that promise upon which the Irish people had been relying for so long, and upon the realisation of which the peace and welfare of that country in the immediate future depended. The Bill would certainly not go to Ireland as a message of peace, and would certainly not have any chance of settling the problem of the evicted tenants. His opinion was that the House of Lords and the landlord party wanted to see the Chief Secretary embroiled during the coming winter in turmoil and trouble in Ireland. Nothing could be more fatal to the peace of that country than the wrecking of this Bill, and it had been done deliberately. The moral for Ireland was that if she desired to get a settlement of this land question she would have to close up her ranks and make her movements sufficiently strong and menacing to overcome the opposition of honourable members above the gangway. He intended to take no further part in the discussion of the Bill.

The Irish Party took no further part in the discussion.

It is believed that the Bill will become law on the lines of Mr. Birrell's speech.

At the chapel of Jesus college, Oxford, there is occasionally used as a font a silver loving-cup weighing 278oz. FARMER'S SHOCKING DEATH.

An extensive cattle raiser in Co. Roscommon named Mr. Denis Nolan has been killed by kicks from the horses attached to a mowing machine which he was driving through Elphin, and both of which took fright. The horses were pulled up about a quarter of a mile outside the town, and Mr. Nolan, who was dead at the time, was released from the cogs. The deceased had the reputation of being one of the best judges of cattle in the West of Ireland.
