PAST
GRAIN DEALERS' QUALIFICATIONS.
The Mayor requires every miller, factor, agent, merchant, clerk, or other person dealing in corn, grain, meal, or flour in this city and within five miles thereof, to qualify forthwith before any such person deals in any of the articles before mentioned; otherwise he is determined to enforce the penalties pursuant to the statute of 1790 for regulating the corn trade. October 26, 1908.

LATERICK
On Monday last, in St. Francis' Abbey, much regretted, Mr. R. Conway.
Monday last, at Woodhouse, near Cahircionish, aged 72 years, Mrs. Hourigan, relict of the late Daniel Hourigan, of Cahircionish, in this county; and a few hours after, in the same house, her grandson, Mr. Richard Hourigan, aged 22 years, very much lamented.
On Friday last, in Ennis, Mrs. C. Shaughnessy, relict of the late Mr. J. Shaughnessy, of Crusheen, Co. Clare.
(To be continued in our issue of Tuesday next.)

LATE MR. J. F. TUMPANE.
Mrs. John F. Tumpane, Miss Kate Tumpane, and family desire to express their most sincere thanks to the public bodies, clergy, magistrates, R.I.C., and their kind friends for the sympathy shown them in their sad bereavement.

LADY "PLOUGHMEN."
Seven ladies competed at the annual ploughing matches at Brightingree, Essex. Although their furrows were somewhat serpentine in colour the Misses Sycamore and Wrench steered theirs with great will, and won a first and second prize, respectively.

GREENHOUSE TEMPERATURE.
The temperature for greenhouses from now till February should be 40 to 45 deg. by night and 50 to 55 deg. by day.
It may rise to 60 or 65 deg. by sunbeats.

INFANTS' BODY FOUND.
A boy named James Fitzmaurice reported to the Dock Police on Sunday that he found the dead body of an infant at Corkarea. The police proceeded to the place and found the body lying in about a foot and a half of water. It turned out to be the remains of a prematurely born female child. An inquest was not deemed necessary.

TOWN WRECKED.
Every building in South Loran, Ohio, has been damaged by the explosion of a dynamite magazine belonging to a local merchant. The windows of all the houses and stores were broken and the church was wrecked. The explosion was caused by a bunter who fired into the magazine, and was himself blown to atoms.

WINTERING FUCHSIAS.
Do not expect too much bloom from fuchsias in winter, remarks a writer in "Amateur Gardening."
I have many times seen what looked like a promising batch of young plants for winter flowering given the best place and treatment the greenhouse afforded; but I have never seen plants so treated respond at all liberally with flowers until the new year was well under way. Keep the plants gently growing, but on no account give up the warmest and best part of the greenhouse to them, and do not give them more water than suffices to keep the leaves fresh and green.

TIPPERARY QUARTER SESSIONS.
The entries for Tipperary Quarter Sessions, which commenced to-day, comprise 335 civil bills, of which 40 are to be defended; 14 ejectments, three defended; 18 publicans' transfers, two criminal injury applications, nine valuation appeals, two land cases, three arbitration cases under the Workmen's Compensation Act, and one claim under the Land Act of 1870.

DIRECT LABOUR.
(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)
Dr. Studdert, of Carrigoblet, reported to the Kilrush District Council on the filthy heaps left on the streets, and Dr. Healy reported on a similar dangerous state of things existing at Mullaigh.
It was stated both places were worked by direct labour, and the necessary orders for abatement were issued.

TRIBUTE TO QUILTY MEN.
At Dublin Lifeboat Display.
A number of the Quilty fishermen who recently performed such admirable rescue services were the central object in the Lifeboat procession in Dublin last Saturday, and a very cordial reception was given them by the crowds that lined the route. Accompanying them was one of their coracles, or light canoes, which was viewed with much curiosity. Three of the fishermen—Thomas Clancy, John O'Connor and Thomas Stack—with Mr. Talty, were accommodated in a waggone, and three others—Patrick Boyle, Patrick Cunneen, and Michael O'Connor—were seated in the coracle, and throughout were entirely occupied in acknowledging compliments from the crowd.
At night a concert was given in the Rathmines Town Hall, where amid great enthusiasm Tom Clancy told the story of the rescue, and Michael O'Connor sang a song in Irish, and Pat Cunneen a song in English.
Rev. A. Bonyage, Rector of Milltownmalbay, who also spoke, said that the Quilty fishermen were not only conspicuous for their bravery but for their inborn courtesy. After 34 years experience of the Catholicism of the South and West of Ireland, he declared, amid applause, he never saw subjected to a rude word or gesture from anyone. A vote of thanks to the fishermen was carried amid enthusiasm.

A FIXED OR A SWIVEL BRIDGE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LIMERICK CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR,—Will you with your usual kindness find room in your next issue for this letter on the above important subject.
I have read your very full report of the proceedings at the last meeting of the Harbour Board, and regret to see the Board adjourned the question of a new fixed bridge until after the question of the new scheme proposed by the Canal Commission is more fully considered. For the life of me I cannot see what that question has to do with my proposal.

I have read the communication from the Canal Commission to the Harbour Board, which consists of some connection between the docks and the canal. As far as I can see the objection must be by the boats that are used on canals, and such boats must be towed from dock to canal by small steam tugs. Admitted that everything else is arranged, surely it is immaterial whether the bridge is a fixed or an opening one of any sort. I ask what then is the necessity to adjourn the question until the canal question is more forward?

I also read that before I was called in, my friend, Mr. Holliday, made a remark regarding the Messrs Cleave's extensive trade. If I had been present I would have assured the Chairman and members that for the last year, or year and a half, I have not spoken to, or even seen, Sir Thomas Cleave, or any of his firm. As in consequence of my long illness, I have not been out or about the city for over twelve months, but for fear anyone would think I was shirking the question, I have no hesitation in saying that the Messrs Cleave deserve, and should receive, every facility from the public Boards of the City in carrying on their extensive business, and I am glad that the discussion raised by Mr. Holliday has given me the opportunity of calling attention to what I consider is a strong, very strong argument in favour of a new bridge instead of the present rickety, inconvenient structure. Remarks have been made as to the cutting up of the streets and roadways by the motor waggon of the firm. Well, I say from the bottom of my heart, God send us more of such work; that is what we need in this city, and not the grass growing on the streets in consequence of the want of traffic, and it is strange that those who make these complaints do not see that my proposal would be a saving of much money, and before I go further I must thank them for the hint.

If the firm's waggons could go from William street straight on to and across the Sarsfield bridge, and down to the factory there would be about two miles of streets and roadway saved from the cutting up, and so much less repairs wanted. And also the cost of the swivel bridge, about £300 a year, saved, and before I leave this part of the matter let me assure the four or five men and their friends that there is no fear they will be sent adrift. I (now that the question is raised) give my word of honour that they will not be discharged, and if they should be I would find them other employment.

There are many other reports spread, that I have taken the matter up—because I have property at the Glais side of the river, etc., etc.—Well, I am not going to answer such statements, save to say, there must be some truth in the old anecdote of St. Menach's cure—you cannot do, or make a move to do, any good, to this fine old, but unfortunate city, but some one will attribute selfish motives to the person who makes the attempt, they are incapable of doing good themselves, and will not allow others to do, or make an effort to do it.
Thanking you by anticipation, I remain Mr. Kelly's faithfully yours.

AMBERG HALL.
THE LATE MR. R. L. BROWN, J.P.

Memorial Service at St. Munchin's Church

At St. Munchin's Church, where the late Mr. R. L. Brown, J.P., was worshipped for a lengthened period, a very impressive service was held last Sunday morning. The sermon was preached by the Rector, the Rev. T. B. Robertson, who took for his text the 12th verse of the 90th psalm, "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." He said that during the past week they had lost a member of the congregation who had worshipped with them for a great number of years, and whose loss they now mourned. He was a man of high qualities, high character, inflexible integrity, whole-hearted uprightness; a man who would suffer any loss or sacrifice so that his sense of duty would not be interfered with. He was a consistent worker in everything connected with the betterment of those around him. He was secretary of the Westropp Trustees—a large charity—secretary of the Protestant Aid Society, a governor of the Villiers Charity Fund, president of the Evangelical Alliance, a member of the Select Vestry of St. Munchin's Church, Synodman, and Nominator, to all of which offices he devoted his time and money, and his was counsel was much sought after, and ungrudgingly given. He was a man who could be depended on at the present day, and there were not many able to take his place. He was an humble Christian, never deflecting one whit from the high ideal of what was right, and although a busy man at all times that did not prevent him from attending his duty as a Christian. Last Sunday, just as he might have been when in health, starting for worship, God took him, took him to Himself, which is far better. The Rev. gentleman further spoke most feelingly of the departed friend, and impressed on the congregation the great necessity for living this life as a preparation for the next.
The hymns sung were of an appropriate character, the Special Memorial Hymn of the choir being sung at the close of the service.
The organist, Mr. J. A. Boyd, played as a voluntary, "O Rest in the Lord," and at the close of the service "The Dead March in Saul," both rendered with effect. The congregation remained standing during the latter.

A VETERAN BELL-RINGER.

Mr. Henry Ellis has just completed fifty years' service as a bellringer of the parish church, Huddersfield, and has received through the Home Secretary the congratulations of the King on the occasion of the birthday of his Majesty and the late Queen Victoria.

THE GODS IN THE GALLERY

"M. A. O'S." William street, writes a long letter asking that something should now be done for the comfort of the "Gods in the Gallery" at the theatre. He points out the danger of the dirt caused (among other things) by having to cross the benches, to get to the front, and suggests that a passage should be cut through in order to obviate this, and considers the masses the poor work people who patronise the gallery, and give more support than the classes should receive some consideration.
