Kitchener and India.

farewell dinner at which Lord Kitchener entertained at Simla draws attention to the at the influence of his powerful personality it to be withdrawn from India and the Army. For seven years the retiring under-in-Chief has laboured at the great of reorganising the defences of our Indian Empire, and the Viceroy bore testimony that his has not been in vain. Lord Minto used the belief that every soldier present—the company included fifteen generals—would agree that Lord Kitchener's centralisation scheme "had placed the Army on a sound and workable footing would bequeath to India an Army better equipped, and paid than she had ever known before." As one surveys the situation it is impossible not to feel thankful for the facts which the Viceroy testified. The Russian may be less than it was; but there are no more. The north-west frontier may yet be the scene of grave trouble, and it is unnecessary to urge upon the spirit of sedition within the bowels of India itself. Military efficiency is a prime requirement for British India, and in that respect she has much for which to be profoundly grateful to Lord Kitchener.

ALLEGED ASSAULT.

At the Police Court to-day, before the Mayor, three men from the Thomondgate district Henry White, Francis Molloy, and Charles Johnston were charged in custody with assaulting one Joseph Carey on the Wellesley Bridge and Henry street on Sunday night. Carey made an information, and on his deposition a warrant was issued for the arrest of the accused, and was executed by Sergeant Keating. In his deposition Carey stated that on Sunday evening the three men accosted him, and immediately Molloy struck deponent in the mouth with his clenched hand, breaking a tooth. They then pursued him into Henry street, where Molloy and White assaulted him, while Johnston held deponent with that object. Evidence having been given, the Mayor dealt with the case, the origin of which was some personal spleen, by binding over the accused in their own recognisances to be of the peace.

SAD DROWNING ACCIDENT NEAR ENNIS.

A drowning accident of a very melancholy character occurred at Clareen, near Ennis, on Saturday evening, when a man named John O'Brien, aged about 80 years, lost his life. It would appear that O'Brien, whose garden adjoins the river, dug some potatoes and gave them to his wife, saying, "I'll saw a couple of plants while these are being cooked." He went to the garden but not returning home within a reasonable time his wife went in search of him, and was horrified to find him lying face downwards in about three feet of water. She at once raised an alarm. Constables Lynch and Shea, who were passing at the time alighted from the transport car, and at once proceeded to remove the body, which was close to the bank. The police with the assistance of some civilians endeavoured to restore animation, but without success, and Constable Shea went back to town for medical assistance, and
