flour and mesh trader, resided at the premises, No. 13 in that thoroughfare, doing a prosperous business, and enjoying fairly good health up to some months since; when he complained to his wife of suffering from nervous attack; which became so serious that it was found necessary to. consult a specialist in Dublin. This was is October last, and his mental condition did not improve as time wore on. Mr. Bourke and his wife occupied the premises; they led examplary lives, and were held in much respect by their neighbours. Yesterday morning the wife went to half past seven o'clock Mass, and on her return, after eight o'clock, she was surprised at not finding her husband in his bedroom. A search was made by her through the house, and as the result she found her husband in the bathroom, his throat cut, and an open razor by his side. The shock to the poor woman was a most trying one, and the Constabulary at John Street were speedily apprised of what had taken place. Constables Bergin and Fenton arrived promptly, but they could not render any assistance, life apparently having been extinct from hemorrhage for some time, although the body was still warm.

In the forenoon an inquest was held by the City Coroner, Mr. James F. Barry, J.P., and the following jury sworn:—P. Quaid, foreman: Michael Collins, A. Lee, J. Quilligan, C. Ciohessy, J. Griffin, T. Dillon, J. McInerney, J. Humphreys, J. Murphy, William Coll, D. Keogh.

District Inspector White conducted the inquiry.

Mis Bridget Bourke was examined, and stated her Lusband, the deceased, was about 57 years of age. He was in bad health for some months past, and consulted a Dublin specialist in October. His health did not improve, and he became queer in manner. On Monday last he got excited and accused witness of speaking to the police about him. Witness detailed the circumstances which occurred that morning, the finding of the body in the bathroom, and the position it was in. As far as she knew there were no financial difficul-

Constable Fenton also gave evidence.

Dr. Mulcahy deposed that death was due to shock and hemorrhage as the result of the wound inflicted. He attended the decessed several times but not lately.

The jury found that death resulted from the wound in the throat, self inflicted, while the decessed was labouring funder temporary insanity. They added a rider expressing decessed was insanity. They sympathy with Mrs. Bourks in her trial
