They might do so in the modern secular cutting off, the eby, progress from the past y of Ireland, or they might preserve all that comed to him this development on the old lie and Irish lifes was the only one that lead them to any prosperity, or preserve the and noblest elements in their national ter. The first step, however, in Irish modern ss must be the deepening of the people's as, sentiment; without this, as a nation, vould come to nothing. As long as they rue to their own history, and follow their eals, they were on the path that led sooner er to sauccess, but if they became the ms or followers of strangers, th would have left them, and they come to nothing. For this reason the work a societies as the Gaelie League, although in acception it was not formally religious, I to him to be a valuable reinforcement of se elements in Irish life. With regard to ion, he did not now dwell on the absurdity University settlement that, providigher education for the most religious in Europe, made detailed regulation by a the exclusion of that nation's religion. vas done now, and they had only to hope they religious faith of the country of the country too strong for such restrictions. Tlien, as. primary system of education. What is and n its weakness on the secular side? Is it unintellectual range, giving its pupils the ism, not the reality of education. On the and could anyone interested in the developthe children's mental faquities, above all r higher side, conceive anything finer for rpose than the broad, deep, philosophical of Catholie doctrine taught in their schools? here, more than anywhere else, they could their desire for progress with the connection of their Irish spirit.

BISHOP OF CASHEL ON LAND THANSFER.

Most Rev. Dr. Fennelly, Archbishop of in the course of his Pastoral, says :- For provement and security of agricultural s four things are indispensable—the simple c life, sobriety, industry, and skill; the of these qualities will enable our people and thrive in their native land. The of the land to the people is, in my judgmatter of the greatest importance from gious point of view. The agricultural on of Ireland is mainly and intensely , strong in faith and deeply devoted practices of religion; and assuming, well may, that through the blessings Catholic Church, and the zeal of our it will continue so, I can see a safe great future for Irish Catholicity anchored in the affections of a people he land they till, thriving on the soil that m, proud of the victory won by the union and people, and determined to assert ect their individual rights against all s and socialistic encroachments. me say to our clergy that the affection ty of our congregations deserve not our m merely, but our practical assistance nathy with everything that concerns them mporal progress, their legitimate national is, and all the other rights to which they ed. Our best wishes are, I feel, with our id our best efforts shall be made to lift he level of national autonomy to which e, and for which they are pre-eminently the high spiritual and moral character tory indicates for the people of Ireland
