Dog Nuisance.

practice, chronic for some considerable last now, of allowing dogs to be about the ill day long without being under proper ol, is one that appears to require some tion from the authorities. The practice in ion is a danger by day and a misance at when these are soores of half-starved ils prowling through the thoroughfares in of food, or barking, howling, or fighting, to anoyance and disturbance of householders. ome of the city districts the night is made than hideous by the canine uproar, the rs of the animals apparently turning them f doors, to the discomfort of their neighbours, lse the disturbers having no owners to look them. However it be, the law requires that should be kept under control day and night, where this is so the police should have no great culty in depoting at least some attention to matter. In other cities such a state of things ld not be tolerated for a second week. Yet ; it has gone on for months and months, in it of fact since the hydrophobia scare died n some years ago.
