

on view this week, and they make a very creditable show indeed. The articles are mainly for personal and domestic purposes, and they are pleasing evidence of what the country can produce in the industrial line, and of what a great advance has been made during the past few years in the rapid development of Irish manufactures. Irish linens and Irish tweeds needed no stimulus to commend them. They have long since been recognised at home and abroad for their excellence, and this circumstance, no doubt, has helped other cognate industries to come well into the front for recognition in commercial centres. A mere superficial glance at the Irish products on view in Limerick will convince anyone who is still doubtful of the future of the Irish Industrial movement that Irish Industries can well hold their own in every respect, and give the lead in not a few instances to the products of other countries whose trade and skill in handicraft have received the encouragement and support in high quarters that until recently has been lacking in this country.

OBITUARY.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. William Ryan, which took place at his residence, Alphonsus Terrace, in the early hours of Sunday morning. He was a young man in the prime of life, but his health, which was never robust, underwent a complete change within the past couple of years. He was for many years in the employment of Messrs. E. and M. Halpin as traveller, and with his employers and the public he was held in very high esteem.

LIMERICK AND THE COAL STRIKE.

The situation caused in Limerick over the coal strike has not very materially changed during the past few days. The price for Orrell coal with the principal merchants remains the same as when it was suddenly put up from 35s. to 40s. per ton on the Saturday of the week before last, and prices for other descriptions show no alteration of any moment since that date. There has been no cessation of any local industry through failure of the coal supply, but one cannot well say how far this may last, should the strike of the miners unfortunately continue much longer. Everybody is hopeful, however, that the strike may be ended as the result of the negotiations which are going on in London between the miners' delegates and those representing the coal owners.

"A Ride for a Bride" is the subject of several realistic turf views, and another interesting film is the the American Boy Scouts, their camp life and the like, and we are afforded an instance of a courageous rescue,
