

resentation. (Hear, hear). For these 29 seats, total poll given to the Coalition has fallen to extent of 4,500 votes, and the total poll for Unionist party has risen to the extent of 800 votes. (Cheers). I have had the calculation made, and the result of it is that if at a general Election there were a turn over of votes on anything like the same scale the Coalition would be at least 100 seats, and the Unionist party would be in power with a majority of close upon 90 members. (Cheers). Ladies and gentlemen, at condition has not been fulfilled. They have not the stable support; they have, on the contrary, the fixed hostility of the constituencies of the United Kingdom. (Hear, hear). Mr. Bonar Law proceeded to deal at length with the Ulster question.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE.

Mr. Lloyd George, again whose engaging frankness almost disarms hostility, has explained to us quite clearly the motives by which this Government are actuated. He told us that the imprisonment of Mr. Larkin was losing them votes. (Laughter.) That was enough. At the next meeting of the Cabinet Mr. Larkin was set free. (Laughter.) Now, I need not tell you here in Dublin that on an important question like this Mr. Birrell would not act on his own responsibility without consulting, and probably receiving the instructions of the real Chief Secretary for Ireland, Mr. Devlin. (Laughter.) What, then, does the position mean? It is this, in plain language—"They put Mr. Larkin in prison to please the Nationalists of Ireland, and they let him out to please the Socialists of England. (Loud cheers.)" There is a frequent reference, Mr. Bonar Law continued, to the contrast of the treatment of Mr. Larkin and Sir Edward Carson. If the Government really believe that they have the right to impose their will by force of arms upon Ulster—(cries of "Never.")—then why have not they stopped the organisation that is going on in Ulster—(Voices—"They cannot do it.") That organisation is infinitely stronger than it was a year ago. I can at least say this—that if I were a member of a Government, and people in any part of the Kingdom openly organised themselves to resist our legitimate authority, I should not remain a member of that Government for a single day unless that organisation was put down. (Cheers). The Unionist policy, he continued, is to insist by every means in our power—every means—(hear, hear)—that this question may be submitted to the judgment of the people. (Cheers). Mr. Law continued, "I thought that Mr. Aquith not only desired a settlement, but that he had hopes of securing it. After the speech last night I think so no longer." The Government, in Mr. Bonar Law's opinion, would "bluff till the last moment, and then climb down."

Sir Edward Carson followed, and expressed Ulster's determination to resist Home Rule. On the motion of Viscount Iveagh, seconded by Mr. James H. Campbell, and supported by Mr. Francis Martin, a resolution of thanks was passed to Mr. Bonar Law and Sir Edward Carson for their presence, and for the message of encouragement which they had brought. The resolution also assured them of the unwavering opposition of all Irish Unionists to the Home Rule Bill, and of their devotion to the cause of the Union.

An overflow meeting was held in the Winter Gardens attached to the Theatre Royal, Sir Maurice Dookrell presiding. Addresses were delivered by Mr. J. H. Campbell, M.P., Mr. Ronald McNeill, M.P., Mr. Bonar Law, Mr. Andrew Jameson, D.L., Capt. Cooper, Sir Edward Carson, etc.

SIR ROBERT BALL'S STORY.

Sir Robert Ball seldom failed to brighten his addresses with a joke. When lecturing at Cambridge on Halley's comet he told his audience that he was engaged to lecture in a remote part of the country. On his arrival at the station he the windows at a height which brought them over the heads of the audience. A subsequent examination of the exterior of the building showed that there were no fewer than about 140 shot pellet marks about the windows which were wrecked, and the conclusion was arrived at that the shots were fired from the boundary wall of the local cemetery nearly fifty yards away.

The ruffianly act is attributed to a local dispute about the organisation of the concert and dance, and the intimidation of some parties from taking part in them. As the result of enquiries into the occurrence the police arrested a young man named Hallinan from Tiernea on suspicion, and he was remanded by Mr McElroy, R.M. The act is strongly denounced in the district.
