of a very sympathetic character, were the death of the Very Rev. Canon Murphy, V.G., yesterday, at the City Petty Sessions, also to the demise of Mr. J. Joyce. Mr. Quinn said he only thought it fit to express the deep sense of regret for the death, the tragic death, of the Very Rev. Canon Murphy. The city had lost what he considered an eminent clergyman that they had known for a long time. In his private and public life as distinct from his priestly office, Canon Murphy was an ornament to Limerick, in which they all felt a great pride. One who shed lustre in the city of his own done good, not only for the city itself, but every where at large, in the cause of education, anything that was good. He (speaker) stood at the moment in a peculiar position, as a friend of Canon Murphy, and as a friend, for nearly a quarter of a century. A couple of weeks since he called to Canon Murphy, and little did he think then that he would have seen him for the last time. Mr. Quinn continued Mr. Quinn, "has gone on ever having suffered considerably, and is poorer for his loss." He also wished to say with Alderman Joyce, M.P., and the loss they had sustained by the death of Canon Murphy, who had passed away in the city.

He proposed a resolution tendering sympathy and condolence of the city to the relatives of the late Canon Murphy, Mr. J. Joyce on their bereavement.

Mr. Quinn seconded the resolution, and Mr. Quinn said so well of the late Canon Murphy by Mr. Quinn.

Mr. Quinn asked to be associated with the

Mr. Sullivan, solr., said, on behalf of the city which he belonged, he desired to be heard in the remarks so ably made by Mr. Quinn of the Bench. As far as he knew of his profession towards Canon Murphy were feelings of the greatest love, pride, because they all felt that in Canon Murphy, in his eloquence, his wisdom and manliness, he was a worthy and representative of the city of Limerick in any sphere into which his duties called him. For himself he found it hard to distinguish an ecclesiastic that had been Canon Murphy. He had known him nearly as long as he had had not only his friendship and affection, and now that he could only say of him was better, better, or nobler friend any other.

He also wished to be associated with the members of the Bench in reference to the death of their friend, Alderman

Mr. B. Moran, solicitor, and District Judge also asked to be associated with the Bench.

Mr. Quinn said he had not the intimate acquaintance of Canon Murphy's acquaintance as a member of the Bench, but he felt sure of the sympathy evoked by his death deserved of a rev gentleman who had lived in the city.

As ordered to transmit a copy of the death of Canon Murphy to the Lordship of the Most Rev Dr. Moran and his relatives of Canon Murphy and

Messrs. Davies,
SURGEON DENTISTS,

Receives Suffragette Deputation

Mr Asquith received at Downing Street a deputation of East End working women who urged the cause of women's suffrage. The deputation's reception from the crowd was mixed, cheering and hooting being heard. The deputation was headed by Mrs. Lansbury and Mr John Scurr.

In his reply, the Premier said he would see the deputation, because their cause was disassociated itself from the crime which had done so much to impede their cause. He knew that the conditions at East End were deplorable. He would not see an increased number of women as spectators. He promised their case would receive mature consideration.
