County Limerick Fatality

Inquest Resumed

INTERESTING EVIDENCE

THE VERDICT

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The adjourned inquest in reference to the death of James Nolan at Gibbstown on the 14th inst, whilst engaged in quarrying operations for the Limerick County Council, was held in the Courthouse, Kilmallock, by Coroner P. J. Cleary, M.D., and a respectable jury, of which Mr. J. O'Donnell was foreman. Sergeant Quirk, Kilmallock, represented the authorities. Mr. J. J. Power, solicitor, represented the widow of deceased, Mr. B. Fox, solicitor, appeared for Patrick Burke, who was injured on the occasion. Mr. P. J. O'Sullivan, solicitor, Limerick, represented the County Council.

Mr. Geo. B. Harrison, H.M. Inspector of Mines, was also present. The first witness examined was Dr. M. Naumara, J.P., who described the injuries on deceased's throat, and gave it as his opinion that death was due to shock and hemorrhage, the result of extensive lacerated wounds on the neck.

Michael Donoghue stated that he was engaged that day in quarrying operations at Gibbstown with Patrick Burke, foreman, and James Nolan, deceased; they cleared out 15 holes which Burke charged with gelignite and Nolan rammed; these were exploded with fuse, after which they charged another hole; Patrick Burke put in the gelignite, and Nolan rammed with the pole produced; while they were engaged at a second hole they sent witness for more cartridges; he had to open a fresh box, and before he had done so the explosion took place; he heard Burke call to relieve him, that he was dead; witness went towards him and came upon Nolan who was on his back with a piece of the pole (produced) stuck in his throat, and this witness extracted; Nolan was dead; witness then went to relieve Burke who was covered almost to his hip with stones; Robert Connors came and assisted him and they released Burke, who was bleeding profusely and appeared to be unconscious; he was subsequently taken away by two men.

Answering further questions, witness said the holes were between 6 and 7 feet apart. Coroner—There is no possibility that they could put the rammer into the completed hole by mistake? No; Nolan was ramming the hole that was not completed; I was not at the second hole; the moment they started to fill it I went away for the cartridges. You were all sober? All sober.

Coroner—I saw them an hour after and they were all perfectly sober. Mr. Harrison, Inspector—Did you take the explosive direct to the quarry that morning from the store? Yes, sir. Was nothing done to warm it? No, sir. So if it got cold or chilled nothing was done to warm it? No, sir.

Have you noticed that the cartridges seemed to be jammed in the hole? No, sir, there was no forcing like that. Mr. Harrison—If a cartridge jammed across a hole there would be no other way of removing it, and a man might unconsciously be using more force than he thought.

John Trebilcock stated that he was engaged at the quarry on that day for another party and saw Nolan, Burke and Donoghue working there; he saw them complete the charge in the first hole with detonator and wire, but no paper or water was put in on the top; the water is supposed to be tamping for the air; when the hole was completed they went to another hole about six or seven feet away; Burke put in the cartridges—two cartridges—and Nolan shoved them down.

Coroner—He did not shove them violently? No; I then heard the explosion and I was knocked on the timber; I was about six feet from the hole on one side. Coroner—You did not become unconscious? I could see and know everything about, but I could not speak or move for a few minutes. What did you see? I saw Burke in front of me and he shouting for help. You did not see Nolan then? No, nor did I know he was dead until I came back for the machinery.

Have you any idea how the explosion occurred—you have much experience? Now; I cannot say how it occurred. Mr. Harrison—Have you ever seen thaw on explosives in the winter time? No, but miners would take them, rub them with their hands, and put them to the fire. You saw them lay them in front of the fire? I did; sometimes they carry them in their pockets or shirts to keep them warm.

Are you aware that the notice on the package warns them against that, but to use the warming pans? No, sir; I did not know that. The Coroner said that was the last witness they would examine that day, but before the inquest concluded there were officials from the County Council present if they desired to make any remarks.

Mr. O'Sullivan, solicitor, said he attended out of respect to the Court of Inquiry that was being held, and he was also, by directions of the County Council, to express their sorrow to the widow of the deceased, who lost his life in such a regrettable manner. And as far as it was in their power to compensate her to the highest penny they would do so, and they would also look after Burke. If they so desired they could have the evidence of one of their officers in reference to these explosions. It was also only right to state that Burke and Nolan were in the employment of the County Council for a long time, and were practically the most experienced men they had.

The Coroner said after the statement that had been made there was no need to go much further, but to find the cause of death, and from the evidence they had got from the two very intelligent witnesses, one who saw the accident and one who was there a few minutes before it, and the doctor's evidence, there was no necessity to go further. As far as he could see there was no negligence displayed by anyone there, the men were perfectly sober and were doing their duty very well as it should be done. Mr. Trebilcock, who had much experience in such matters had told them that he had seen Nolan shove the cartridge gently with the pole. To his (the Coroner's) mind the accident must have been due to some peculiar quality of the cartridge. Mr. Burke had told him that the second cartridge that he put in made a greater noise as it went along, which would go to show that it was a different quality of cartridge.

Kilmallock Labourers' Inquiry

SCHEME ALTERED

HALF-ACRE PLOTS SUBSTITUTED FOR ACRE PLOTS

VIEWS OF L. G. BOARD INSPECTOR

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

At Friday's meeting of the Kilmallock District Council, Mr. John Carroll, J.P. (chairman), said at the time they made the labourers' scheme for cottages and acre allotments they had to make a rough estimate of £130 for building, since when the cost of building material and labour had gone up to such an extent that they could not now erect any sort of a suitable house that the labourers would require for that sum; and it had been suggested that if they altered the scheme by withdrawing half an acre and adding what that would cost to the building scheme they would be in a far better position to proceed with it. During the inquiry he understood a great many people were willing to give the site of a cottage, provided only half an acre was attached, and that they would oppose it if the whole acre was to be given. They had nothing to do with the question, what they had to consider was, if they adhered to the original scheme would they be able to build the cottages? There was no possibility of getting a supplementary grant under present circumstances, and the question was would they keep to the original acre or alter it to half an acre?

Mr. Jones—I thought they all agreed to the half acre the day I was here at the inquiry. Mr. Doherty said it was quite evident they would get no house built for £130; therefore, how could they carry through an acre scheme?

Mr. William Moloney said their estimate was four years old, and it was made on the cost of building a cottage at the time. Would not it be reasonable to ask the L.G. Board to allow them to recast the estimate for the building considering the increased cost since the estimate was made?

Mr. Power, solicitor, said whatever might become of such an application, if they were to amend the scheme they should do so immediately. There was no difficulty in so doing. All the applicants that were asked at the inquiry said they would be quite pleased with half an acre.

Mr. Bennett said the Council were in favour of cottages, and people getting them were glad to get the half-acre. The possibility was that if they proceeded with the acre plots the cottages would be diminished, and considering that he would move to amend the scheme, and he did not think anyone could cavil at it, their desire being to give more houses to deserving people.

The Inspector (Mr. Murphy) having been asked for his views, said he was there by the merest accident, but he was complimented that they should ask his advice in the matter. They should understand that they were masters in the situation, and he would simply put his views before them, but it was entirely for themselves to decide. Mr. Bennett had put the matter rather clearly before the meeting. The applicants that came before him (the Inspector) undoubtedly were almost unanimous in agreeing to take half an acre. Already there were a great number of cottages in the rural district, and this scheme would further increase them. The applicants in a great proportion were young unmarried men, and while everyone would like to provide them with houses they were hardly applicants that were most in want of cottages. However, as had been mentioned, the prices and everything had gone up, and the difficulty may arise—he did not say it would—but it was probable with the present financial state of the country that a difficulty may arise in regard to getting an additional loan. Everyone agreed that the dwellings were wanted. There was another matter, with regard to the occupiers and owners, that at least their objections would not be half as strong and he thought they would withdraw them if they knew it was only a question of half an acre instead of one acre and ten perches. Those were the circumstances, and it was entirely for the Council, but if he might suggest it, that they would be meeting the requirements and wishes of the applicants to a great extent, a number of the objections which he would have to consider very carefully, by reducing the scheme from an acre to half an acre. The Council were the masters of the situation, and he gave his views because they asked them.

Mr. D. Moloney—If the Local Government Board would be agreeable to allow us to apply the money of the half acre to the building scheme. Inspector—I can't answer you definitely, but I should say that you would have a far better case in asking for a supplementary loan, having reduced the scheme with that view before you. It is an argument in favour of getting an additional loan.

Mr. Bennett was understood to say—That was our object in reducing the scheme. Inspector—I am very much obliged for asking my view, and I am only glad to say that the inquiry concluded yesterday very happily. We went through it without any trouble, and I am sure a great deal of it must be due to the courtesy and kindness of the members of the Council.

Mr. Bennett—We are all very grateful to Mr. Murphy, too, because he dealt with the inquiry in a most amicable spirit, and we are all thankful to him.

Mr. Daniel Moloney—I think we have nothing to do but to reduce the scheme, and represent to the Local Government Board that the money spared off the half-acre would be added to that for the cottages. By that means you will get more cottages, and really the houses are the principal thing in any scheme.

Mr. Hanrahan questioned that a person getting only half an acre would be content while others had an acre; and said it might be that they would have another agitation that would drive them into the open market again.

Mr. Daniel Moloney said there was no doubt but it would come some time, but was it not better to try and build houses and give the labourers accommodation. They were better off with a house and half an acre than having no house at all.

Mr. Bennett—If a man went into the open market now for money he would find it very difficult to get it.
