

... however, at an early hour on Sunday morning, he suddenly collapsed, and died in a few hours. The remains were removed yesterday (Monday) morning from the Queen's Hotel for interment at Headford. The facts having been communicated to the Coroner, it was decided that an inquest was not necessary.

LUGGER CREW

Insane on the High Seas.

The Press Association Grimsby correspondent telegraphs some details of an extraordinary occurrence at sea which have been revealed by the arrival in the Humber yesterday of a Dutch herring lugger, accompanied by a Norwegian steamer. It appears that the lugger was observed by the steamer about 130 miles off Scarborough on Sunday morning drifting helplessly about. The captain of the Norwegian vessel sent a small boat to the lugger to investigate, and the whole of the crew, including the skipper of the lugger, were found to be insane. They were taken aboard the steamer.
