Mr Hunt was pressing the witness to show that there were unfriendly terms between the two young men over a girl, when

Mr McElroy said that he need not mind going into the question of the colleen. Let the County Court Judge decide about the colleen if there is any dispute about her. (Laughter).

Mr Hunt—I want to show there is no justification for this charge.

Are you a better man than Doohan?—I could not tell you.

Did you ever try?—I will try now opposite you if you like (laughter).

Mr Hunt—This is the sort of fellow you have coming here asking for the protection of the law!

Chairman—He is entitled to the protection of the law, as is any man threatened with a revolver.

There was no witness for the defence, and eventually both parties were bound to the peace, themselves in £10, and two securities in £5 each.

The remains were enclosed in a heavily mounted coffin, which, as a last token of their esteem for the deceased, the numerous friends conveyed from the house to the churchyard on their shoulders. The officiating clergyman was the Ven. Archdeacon Haydn, LL.D, who in the course of a very touching address stated that the late Mr Micks was a very dear friend of his, and was held in the highest esteem not only by him personally, but by all that knew him. He was a most loving husband, an affectionate father, and, above all, was regularly to be found at his place of worship, and was—no could say it without hesitation—a true Christian, and died a Christian's death. In conclusion, the Ven. Archdeacon tendered his sincere sympathies to his bereaved ones, who, he said, would never blush at mention of his name.
