

mur or even a growl to be heard, they but indeed few and of no import in the give of the overwhelming majority of the entry to suffer any and every privation till peace is once again with us. It is, no doubt, a time for effort to be made with object for mutual aid and help. It may be added, a time for seeing at the conditions laid down by the Food Controller to regulate the food supply are rigidly and faithfully observed. The call to the public is one to which their experience so far an entire stranger, and their realization of its urgency one to which there can be but, at best, a slow awakening. Even the law itself moves slowly on such great and rare occasions as the present, and has to wait itself for the time when war threatens us abroad, and the State in peril. Time, of course, is perforce, consumed in shaping details, and the food resources of a country is a question with details of working to an unwonted degree. They require shaping, application, habitats, and, goodness knows, what besides. But co-operation is the great factor for administrators and consumers alike, and this joint combination should work smoothly if it is to have the full measure of success. Prices, too, are another important matter in the situation. The shortage of supplies has sent prices up, and the desire for profit in some few commercial circles has buoyed the ascent more or less where it might be otherwise. It has not been so, happily, to any wide extent, and in the cases which have come before the courts the offenders were, in the main, such on technical grounds, or, as they pleaded, acted in ignorance of the Food Controller's Orders. This is no valid defence, however, and the authorities appear not disposed to turn aside from taking every precaution, by fine or otherwise, to have the rights of the public protected, as these rights are by this time pretty well arranged. It would be, perhaps, going too far to say, satisfactorily arranged as the Controller's Orders apply to Ireland. There have been too many well-grounded complaints as to traders being seriously handicapped by specific regulations, and the consumers' interests in this country have, in large numbers of cases, been ignored. The Food Controller is working for, it is to be taken, the entire community, and home committees

DEATH OF MAJOR T G MAWE.

We regret to announce the death of Major T G Mawe, which took place at his residence, Old Wellington Terrace, yesterday, after an illness of some duration. The deceased gentleman was in his eightieth year, and came of an old and respected County Kerry family. He was only son of the late Mr Harvey Mawe, Tralee, a well-known couraging man in his day. The late Major Mawe was attached to the 1st West India Regiment for a number of years, and saw a good deal of active service. Coming to Limerick he was appointed Adjutant of the 5th Royal Munster Fusiliers, and after a service of twenty-seven years with the County Limerick Regiment he retired from the Army sixteen years ago. He was well-known in Limerick city and county, and by his death an old and highly respected citizen passes away. The funeral, which is private, will take place at 10 o'clock on Monday morning for St Munshin's.

EXTENSIVE CATTLE DRIVE IN CLARE.

Ennis, Friday.

A cattle drive on an extensive scale is reported from East Clare, when yesterday about a hundred and fifty stock were driven off the lands of Derrymore and Ballinahinch, belonging to Mrs Gore, the widow of the late General E. A. Gore. The cattle were driven all over the district, as far as Kullaloe on one side, and Broadford on the other, and police have gone from Ennis to assist in the search for them. It is already reported that a sawmill, which was in the woods on the same lands, which are being cut down by government contractors, has also been dismantled.
