POSTAGE RATES.

Deputation to Mr Kelleway.

Replying to a deputation from the Industrial Council of the Printing and Allied yesterday, which urged the serious difficulty that would accrue from the proposed increase in postage rates,

Mr Kelleway, Postmaster-General, expressed regret that any increase should be necessary at the present juncture, and said he was influenced by the careful statement of the deputation held out little hope of any change being made. The Post Office was faced with the unpleasant fact that three and a half millions had been found, and so far no practical suggestion had been put forward as to how this amount was to be raised.

The members of the deputation pointed out that an increase in the rates would certainly not result in the increase in revenue, but the Postmaster-General replied he relied on carefully prepared estimates submitted to him. He promised to give careful consideration to the representations made.
