EIDDFFOD.
The report of the Commission, the Eisteddfod is an instrument of national unity and as a testimony of Celtic culture. It is not merely a pastime for the leisured classes but for the whole people. Its importance, on the life of the nation, in the year can hardly be overestimated. It is noted as its most characteristic feature that which is least understood. Welsh verse is a complicated system, and needs a number of men to explain it, and for whom the main interest of their
