Ireland. His leisure time he devoted to chemical research, and in connection therewith he made many important discoveries, including a process for dealing with the purification of town sewage, which has been patented and put into use in England. He also discovered many valuable by-products in creamery refuse, and at the time of his breakdown in health he was engaged in experiments associated with their commercial utilization. He also carried out many experiments for the utilization of peat, and was a well-known toxicologist. In this connection his services were frequently requisitioned in important cases, and it is of interest to recall that he was associated with Professor M'Weeny in his investigations of the Mt. Vincent Orphanage case some years ago. He wrote extensively for the scientific journals, and problems that had hitherto baffled all efforts to elucidate were solved by him, and have resulted in laying the foundation for future discoveries that must be beneficial to the country.

The interment took place yesterday in the family vault St Patrick's Cemetery.

LIMERICK STREET FIRING.

On Sunday night what appeared to be a shot was fired in Davis street, causing alarm to the crowd of people awaiting the arrival of excursion trains from Cork. About the same time a shot was discharged in the Crescent, and a stampede followed. The occurrences attracted the attention of the police, but no weapons were found or any person injured. The incidents are attributed to young fellows in their efforts to create a scare. It was subsequently ascertained that James McInerney, Dixon's Lane, a youth, was wounded in the right knee, but the injury not being serious he was discharged after being treated.
