

Seven o'clock last night two bombs were thrown into the area of the Protestant men's Association, 97 O'Connell-street. At the time the streets were practised, and the explosions which followed all over the city and suburbs. Following the explosion upwards of hundreds of the Republican police force were on the scene, and instituted enquiries. The explosion rounded the block of buildings at the Association premises and got on to the top of the building, which is undergoing extensive alterations, in the hope of finding the cause of the outrage, but no trace of them was found. This morning it was ascertained that the damage done was confined to the shattered windows of the billiard room, and a large number of people visited the place to see the extent of the damage. Up to the present no arrests have been made.

GENOA CONFERENCE.

Big Majority for Mr Lloyd George.

In the British House of Commons yesterday, Mr Lloyd George, who was received with loud Ministerial cheers, moved: "That this House approves of the resolution as passed by the Supreme Council at Cannes as a basis of the Genoa Conference, and will support his Majesty's Government on endeavouring to give effect to them." He had been informed by the Press that the resolution was not the original resolution he submitted to the judgment of his colleagues. As a matter of fact, it was the exact resolution he suggested a fortnight ago, and his colleagues were good enough to accept it in the very form in which he submitted it on that occasion. If the resolution was defeated for any reason, then it would be equivalent to a vote of no confidence in the Government.

Eventually the resolution was carried by 372 to 94.
