ARCHBISHOP OF CASHEL AND PEACE.

The Most Rev Dr Harty, Archbishop of Cashel, paid his triennial visitation to Hospital on Monday, when he administered the Sacrament of Confirmation to about 300 children from the united Parishes of Hospital and Herbertstown.

His Grace delivered an address, in the course of which, after a further exhortation on prayer, especially that now in progress for final peace, his Grace said that we are on the threshold of a free and happy Ireland. It was glad news to him, to all he was sure, that their leaders had come to an agreement which, he hoped, would restore everlasting peace to our distracted country. It was sad to see the fine young men of Ireland opposed to one another, and it was sad to see, too, their poor country almost on the verge of chaos and civil war; but by the agreement now reached between their leaders all this trouble had been averted, and he hoped that the young men of Ireland would now come together and do their best like brothers in building up a glorious nation. Stable government must follow this happy union and they might in the near future witness poor old Ireland the home of a happy, loving, contented and free people.
