

of vote against O'Connell. There are those whose pensions or salaries were cut, workers who cannot secure employment, disappointed expectants, certain farmers who think agriculture has been neglected, and many there who are strong Treatyites, but who think that by giving the Government the jolt they will get their particular grievances attended to. Indeed, considering the long start Mr Crowley had, and the arts employed throughout the election, the wonder is O'Connell succeeded in winning. There was a huge display of motors, posters and leaflets, innumerable attractive photographs of the candidate, hundreds of workers from outside, and the usual fairy tales from canvassers. Indeed, it seemed as if all that was required to change Ireland into a Garden of Eden was to vote for Crowley.

"One lady in particular, through whose veins flows the blue blood of the planter, and whose foreign title raises her above the common herd, as particularly touching. With uplifted hands she deplored the squalor of Limerick, and pointed to a very simple remedy for its removal. She conveniently forgot that when she was Minister of Labour in a purely Republican Government she left the squalor just as it was. Nor was she wanting the nameless slunderer who meanly and falsely assailed the private character of Mr O'Connell, but these arts were vainly tried; the at could not be snatched.

"Is it too much to ask sincere Republicans to look less of a party victory, and think more of what their policy really means for their country. Have they ever asked themselves why many who a few years ago were strong supporters, and even active agents of the British, are now loud-mouthed Republicans. Do they think that men so fought for the British Empire and scorned Sinn Fein are really genuine converts? And are they satisfied that the giddy girls, who but recently devoted their best energies to cultivating a Black and Tans, and now seem to regard it the highest form of patriotism to personate as they can, are they a credit to the movement. Will they not clear their minds to what England is doing just what she did a century and a quarter ago, creating a pretext for other conquest in order to deprive us of the liberty we have secured by the Treaty."

WINDOW BREAKING.

During the early hours of Sunday morning the windows in the house of a man named Shine, in Market-street, were completely wrecked. No one can be assigned for the outrage, unless it is a political one. The house was, it is stated, used as a polling booth at the election last week, and a girl was arrested therein for alleged intimidation.

himself to his parents and all with whom he was acquainted, and desires, to convey its deepest sympathy to Mr and Mrs Power in their sad bereavement, and that this meeting adjourns as a mark of respect."

Mr Ryan, in seconding the resolution, said every member felt the great loss their respected Secretary had sustained in the death of his son, who was a young man in the prime of life, with a promise of following in his father's footsteps. Mr Charles Power, had he been spared, would, he ventured to say, become in time one of the city's big commercial men.

Mr D Griffin, in associating himself with the resolution, said the late Mr Power was a genial citizen, with every prospect before him.

The other members having spoken in warm terms of the deceased,

Mr Morony, on behalf of the officials, said he should wish to tender their sympathy to their Secretary, Mr J F Power, for whom they entertained the greatest regard and esteem, and to his family in their bereavement at the loss of one whom they had always looked upon as a true and kindly friend.

The resolution was then put and declared passed in silence, the members standing.

DEATH OF MR JOHN CONDON, SOLICITOR.

We record with very sincere regret the death of a widely known and popular county practitioner, Mr John Condon, Solicitor, Newcastle West, which took place in Cork, where he had been undergoing medical treatment, on Saturday last in his 68th year. The sad and unexpected news was received with deep regret by all classes and creeds in West Limerick, where for a long span of years the deceased gentleman was a conspicuous personality. The late Mr Condon served his apprenticeship to the late Mr Jonas Blackall, solicitor of this city, and was admitted a Solicitor in the Trinity Term of 1881. Since then he practised in Newcastle West, and had also an office in Listowel. His business was very extensive. He was an able lawyer, a persuasive and eloquent speaker, and one who possessed a fund of humour. The most genial of men, invariably kind and courteous, he enjoyed the respect and esteem of a very wide circle of friends. He was brother-in-law of Mr E J McElligott, K.C., being married to the latter gentleman's sister. In the old days Mr Condon took a prominent part in the National movement, and was a personal friend of the late Mr John Redmond and other M.P's. The funeral took place yesterday, the interment being in the family burial ground at Kilsannel, Ardagh. The cortege was very large and representative.

The chief mourners—James Condon and Patrick Condon (brothers), Gerald McElligott, Edward McElligott, K.C., and Wm McElligott brothers-in-law).
