FISHERY CASES.

Charges of Disturbing Spawning Beds.

At Listowel District Court, bef
 P. P. O'Donoghue,

Mr H. Bindon Alton, Secretary of rick Fishery Conservators, prosecuted Nash, Lyncrompane, aged 15 year obstructing the passage of salmon and and disturbing spawning beds.

Jeremiah Keane, water bailiff, sta was standing some distance from defe when he saw him, by the aid of a tel throw stones into the river. He w defendant and asked him his name, him, and said he meant no harm by w had done. He (witness) asked him v father was, he told him, and added t was a poor man. Witness further r that the river was very shallow a particular part and that the salmon c very easily seen from the bank. made very difficult for him by the fellows who resided around there to his duties as water bailiff as they flash lamps.

The Justice, having heard the ca missed it under the Probation of O Act, with 30s. costs. Mr O'Donogh the defendant to inform his compan Lyncrompane that if they continued trouble, they would find themselves formatory school.

Patrick Buckley was also charge disturbing the spawning beds by c stones through that particular part river.

Mr McAuley, for the Fisheries dwelt at length on the seriousness offence, the minimum fine being £2 maximum fine £25. He said the M took a very serious view of such case loss of one spawning bed would resul loss of about 10,000 fish.

Defendant said he did not know a about spawning beds, and only dr stones from where his employer, N Foran, told him.

Having heard the case fully,

The Justice made the same ord the last case, and that 30s. costs be
