AND TOURIST TRAFFIC.

It is to be seen that the Limerick Irish Tourist Association, founded here a couple of years ago, has taken the fore in the matter of the management of the tourist traffic, not only as a local point of view, but in an antiquarian and historic addition it has at its very core the Power Scheme, which in the past years attracted thousands of tourists from all parts of Ireland, and a number from America and elsewhere. Our concern, therefore, to bring it “on the map,” as the saying is, is an important means to that end.
The Carnival, which in advertising reactions and its industrial possibilities, cannot but have great results. The Industrial Exhibition will have a stimulating effect from this end to Dublin longer time to transact business in the metropolis.

DEATH OF MR JAMES QUIN.

We announce with sincere regret the death of Mr James Quin, a prominent citizen and business man, which occurred on Sunday evening at his residence, Kleinberg, South Circular Road, following an illness of considerable duration. The deceased gentleman, who had reached his eightieth year, was Chairman of the well known and old-established wholesale and retail grocery, wine, and spirit firm of Messrs John Quin & Co., Ltd., Patrick-street. A man of sound business views, and wide commercial experience, Mr Quin was elder son of the late Mr John Quin, D.L., who, it may be remarked, defrayed the cost of the tower of the Church of St.
Alphonsus, and installed therein the chime of bells many years ago. He was brother of Sir Stephen B. Quin, D.L., who filled the office of Mayor of the city in 1916 and 1917, and was twice High Sheriff. Mr James Quin was a Justice of the Peace for the city, a former member of the Harbour Board and Chamber of Commerce, and President of the Society of St Vincent de Paul for many years. He never took any part in politics, but was keenly interested in every movement initiated for the benefit of the city, particularly in the housing of the poor and other philanthropic works.
To the Society of St. Vincent de Paul he gave much of his time, and seldom, while his health permitted, was he absent from the conferences, and he also took a keen interest in the City Fuel Fund. His death removes from the city a gentleman who was held in the greatest respect and esteem by the citizens, and their sympathy is extended to his widow and family in their bereavement.

The funeral arrangements appear in obituary notice.
