
Death of Mr J McMahon

National School Inspector

All over Ireland, but no where more keenly than in Limerick, where he had numbered friends universally, grief is felt at the death of Mr Joseph McMahon. For forty years he was Inspector of National Schools, his services extending all over Ireland. Full of bon homie, geniality and marked development of Christian charity, he was the soul and master hand of all classes who knew him. He was brother of the Right Hon James McMahon Under Secretary of State for Ireland; and of John McMahon, Irish Land Commission. He was a devout Catholic.
