

Death of Famous Hurler

Irishman Killed in New York

Gentle New York papers contain a long account of the death on November 21st of James J. Hurley, a well-known Clare hurler of O'Callaghan's Mills, of which he was at one time captain of the local team. He had played against some of the best men in Ireland. He was killed when returning home from work by a large auto truck, living only a short time after the accident. "A gentleman on and off the field" was the invariable title accorded him by his colleagues, and it was in every way deserved.
