

Donegal town, the Annals were written, is keenly interested in the national ceremony of commemoration, and it is likely that the stamp issue will be made in conjunction with this solemnity.

The Annals, which are a compilation of Irish history from the beginning of the world to the year 1608, were begun in 1631 by Michael O'Cleirigh, Franciscan lay brother, member of a famous Donegal family of traditional historians, and three other professional Ollamhs. The four and a half years the work occupied were years of war and upheaval and persecution, and the compilers had to travel from end to end of the land in perpetual want and extreme personal danger.

A suggestion has also been made that a more stately monument should be erected in Dublin in a public place, instead of the present small memorial hidden away in one of the smaller streets.

RATHKEALE TRAGEDY.

Mrs. Mary Bradley, aged 75 years, was found dead in a rain water tank, 3 feet deep at her home in Amogan Mor, near Rathkeale, about 4 p.m. on Monday evening. Deceased, who was an invalid, lived with her sister, Miss Nellie O'Grady, in a beautiful residence which they had built near their own home after returning from the U.S.A. a few years ago.

At an enquiry held by Deputy Coroner Cussen later on Monday evening, Miss O'Grady explained how she went to the well for a bucket of water, and left Mrs. Bradley sitting on a chair out in the open and on returning found her floating face downwards in the tank.

Dr. J. B. Hayes, who was sent for, and came along immediately, stated in evidence that in his opinion death was due to heart failure, following submersion in water.

A verdict in accordance with the medical testimony was returned.
