
Sudden Death in the City

James Mooney, a carpenter, aged 70 years, died suddenly at his lodgings in Corbally on Wednesday night. He retired to bed rather early, and some time later when the proprietress of the house went to his room with a drink she found him dead. The facts having been communicated to the city coroner, he did not consider an inquest necessary.
