acted with greater promptitude the citizens would never have heard of this suit and there would be no revival of th<sup>e</sup> suitability or otherwise of the site for a large housing project. What is don<sup>e</sup> cannot be very well done, therefore nothing is and can be gained by a recital of a story which has been debated ad nauseum. Any location outside of a swamp was preferable to the wretched places from where the tenants were transferred to the Island Field, which, in the words of Judge McElligott, was not a really bad site, and the Corporation were justified in building on it. The judicial view will be shared in by the average layman whatever about the technicians. It was the first serious attempt made in Limerick at planning on a system and bringing the denizens of huddled hovels into the green belt to enjoy the pleasant amenities of com- fortable dwellings, pure air, sunshine and healthy enviorment. All these are available to the occupiers of the houses erected on the Island Field.
