In sending forth the revised and authentic manual of the rules of the Gaelic Athletic Association, some words by way of preface may not be unwelcome or unsuitable to the Gaelic friends and brothers both at home and abroad. It is certain that, for one reason or another, few movements have been started in Ireland or elsewhere within recent years that took hold of the Gaelic mind so quickly and spread so rapidly as the Gaelic Athletic Association has done both in our own soil and even in outside distant lands, where the sea-divided Gaels most congregate. It will not be needful here to account at length for the reasons of this acknowledged fact.

The Association was established at Thurles on November 1st, 1884.
 For a considerable time there had existed a strong desire in the minds of many Irishmen to start such an organisation and various attempts to do so were tried by some well-wishers of our national pastimes.
 But these efforts failed on one ground or another, though the objects in view were highly commendable. They were nearly identical with those which were made the basis of the Association that was launched into existence at Thurles, the objects of which were somewhat of the following character:—It was intended to encourage Irish games as practised by the people of the Celtic stock, and to direct them by well-defined rules, which were to be published and circulated among all friends and followers of our national sports and pastimes. It was hoped that by bringing players and spectators from distant quarters into friendly intercourse good feeling and fellowship would be established and intensified among our countrymen.
 Old feuds and factions, it was thought would be buried; parish quarrels would be ended; the axe would be finally at the root of faction fighting and all other sources of unsocial, unmanly and unreasonable recrimination would die out and be heard of no more on the athletic fields of Ireland.

Dr. Croke's Patronage.
 "Such aims and intentions should commend themselves to the approbation of all sincere well-wishers of our race, and this fact was visibly realised in the case of the Gaelic Athletic Association. The name of the Archbishop of Cashel was connected with it from the outset. His patronage was a tower of strength to the organisation from its infancy. His pen was frequently employed in its support. When later the Gaelic ship was on the point of sailing into troubled waters and the enemies of our name and
