week, it must be realised, plays an important part in the lessening of hardships of the times for the suffering poor, and we bespeak for the collection a widespread and generous response, so that adequate funds may be made available to the members of the Society to continue their admirable activities, without curtailment, through the coming year.

The members of the Society pay thousands of visits throughout the year to the homes of the poor, and use their best endeavours and give freely of their time to ascertain the most deserving families amongst our less fortunate brethren. Without much effort on the part of the public, beyond the giving, be it small or big in the realm of generosity, they can be assured that the contribution through the channel of the St. Vincent de Paul Society will find its maximum benefit for the poor.
