portrayal was given Meriel Moore, who brought a difficult role of Phoebe to the stage, a delineation which was most convincing.

Micheal MacLiammoir, a man of the customary capable self, was the star of Valentine Brown and Carmichael as Susan Thorne, who had a definite success. Roy D'Amico was notably good in his characterisation of Ensign Blades, and the other supporting members included a number of amateurs, formed a splendid picture up to the general picture.

"WHERE STARS WALK"

"Where Stars Walk" is a brilliantly witty play by Mr. Micheal MacLiammoir, which received so much attention on the last of the Company's visit, will be produced to-night (Friday) at the Theatre. The play is woven in a modern setting with a legendary background, and is allowed to intrude only a delicacy of touch which seeks to depart from realism. The dialogue is especially fine, and for those who enjoy humour at its best "Where Stars Walk" has everything to commend it. "The Doctor's" Frank Carney, will be seen Saturday matinee and at
