

City Tragedies

Two sudden deaths are reported to have taken place in Limerick on Sunday. At about 6.30 a.m. some people on their way to Mass observed a man in a sitting position outside a store in Carr street. On investigation it was found that the man was dead. The remains were later identified as those of Patrick Walsh (60), St Munchin street, Island Field.

The second sudden death was that of an aged man—Patrick Slattery, Crossgalla. Some time after breakfast the deceased left his house to exercise a greyhound in a nearby field. Later he was discovered in a dying condition in a field and in a short time he expired.

Michael Wrenn, an old age pensioner, native of Murroe, died in the City Home Hospital from injuries to his throat. The deceased was committed to the Co. Gaol last Wednesday arising out of a charge concerning his injuries, and as his condition grew worse he was transferred to hospital where he expired.
